Dear Diary,

Today, something that nobody expected would happen, but somehow it ended in the best possible way. Now, I'm going to tell you the whole story...

This morning, I went to the Art Museum in high spirits. I was over the moon because this was my first time visiting the Museum. I went to the second floor and saw the infamous Statue of King Grape Ape. It was the biggest statue I've ever seen. At the corner of my eye, I saw a suspicious man that was wearing a cap and a blue mask. 'This man is so weird. I think he is a thief...' I said to myself.

Just as I came to my senses, the thief was staring at a woman's handbag intensively.

A few seconds later, the thief sneaked towards the woman. He quickly snatched away the woman's mobile phone. The thief ran right away. The woman was shocked. She called the police. The police asked me, 'What was the thief wearing?' 'He was wearing blue trousers and a white T-shirt. He had a mask and he wore a cap,' I replied. The police looked at the cameras. 'Oh! We know who he is,' they shouted. Then, they went out of the Art Museum and caught the thief somewhere in Central.

In the end, the police returned the phone to the woman. 'Thanks!' she exclaimed happily.

This event taught me one thing. You should keep your backpack in the front of you so you can know if someone wants to steal your stuff.
