Dear Roy,

How are you? I hope you're having a good time. I want to share the most interesting thing that happened yesterday. Let me tell you...

It all started when I was on my way home yesterday. I was taking the bus home after an average day of school. When I sat down on a seat, I noticed some slurping noises. It turned out there were two boys opposite my seat gobbling up fish balls like pigs! Not only were they behaving like slobs, they were also breaking the rules, as we are not allowed to eat or drink on the bus. 'How unlucky,' I thought. They were so annoying!

Just then, a shivering woman with a mask on boarded the bus. She looked sick so I offered her my seat and assisted her to sit down. Instead of showing kindness and compassion to others, the boys, who were also very mean, hurled insults at the poor woman, telling her to buzz off. 'Eww! Don't get near me! I don't want your icky germs!' one of the boys whined.

Suddenly, I felt myself seething with rage. I was as angry as a lion! I yelled at those two naughty boys. 'Can't you two just stop being so stupid?' The whole bus became so quiet that you could hear a pin drop.

Out of the blue, a wide, wicked smile spread across one of the boy's faces. 'Oopsy-daisy!' he said slyly. Then he dropped his fish balls on my shoes! I was so upset!

Luckily, a plump woman came. It turned out that she was one of the boy's mother! She offered to pay for my shoes as the boys were scolded by their father. Ironically, even though I felt a sweet sense of victory in my heart, I still hope the boys are okay.
